About easements and this document:

What Documents Are in this Report?

We have provided you with two types of document:
The Parcel Register for your property.
Easement Instruments on title

Where does the information in this report come from?

The Parcel Register and Easement Instruments come from Teranet Inc. Teranet is the exclusive provider of Ontario's online property search and registration. They developed, own and operate the Ontario Electronic Land Registration System – one of the most advanced, secure and sophisticated land registration systems in the world. Protect Your Boundaries is a licensed partner of Teranet.

How Accurate is this Report?

This report is based on the easements identified in the thumbnail legal description of a property provided by Teranet Inc. If an easement is in the property's thumbnail legal description, we have made every reasonable effort to identify it and provide you with the legal documentation that describes the easements, along with a simplified explanation. We do not warrant the identification or explanation of any easements (registered or unregistered) that do not appear in the property's thumbnail legal description, or that have been documented in the thumbnail legal description in a nonconventional manner.

Is this report a full title search?

No it is not. It is simply an identification of, and explanation of the easements identified in a property's thumbnail legal description.

What is an easement?

An easement provides the legal right to use a portion of another's land for specific purposes. Are there different types of easement? Yes, there are dozens of types of easement, however the two most common ones in residential properties are access easements (including shared driveways, laneways and access paths), and utility easements.

Are all easements shown on title?

The answer should be yes, however the sheer volume of easement that exist means that occasionally a legitimate easement does not make it onto a property's title. That does not mean it doesn't exist or that it's not valid. Unregistered easements are a rare occurrence, so if you suspect that there's an easement on a property that's not shown in the legal description contact us at Protect Your Boundaries for a full investigation.

What is a Parcel Register?

A Parcel Register is the official record of land ownership and property information that is held by the Land Registration System of Ontario. It is a realtime current account of the property you own that is managed by Teranet Inc. who is responsible for managing and providing access to this information.

What is an Easement Instrument?

An easement instrument is a legal document that is registered on title and describes the location, extent and use of an easement, and the rights and obligations of those party to the easement.

Subject To vs. Together With Easement Rights

There are always two parties to an easement:
The Servient Tenement the—party giving up the access right.
The Dominant Tenement—the party gaining the right.

If a property is the servient tenement in an easement, it is "Subject To" the rights of another party. In the property's legal description this is usually abbreviated to "ST" or "S/T". If a property is the dominant tenement in an easement, it holds rights over another property "Together With" that property. In the property's legal description this is usually abbreviated to "TW"or "T/W".

What does it mean if my property is Subject To (S/T) and easement.

It means that another property or party has legal rights to use a portion of your land for a specific purpose. The extent and location of the easement are usually described in the easement instruments (attached to this report), or on a land survey, which you can search for on Protect Your Boundaries (www.protectyourboundaries.ca).

What Does it mean if my property has Together With (T/W) rights on an easement.

It means that your property has legal rights to use a portion of another property for a specific purpose. The extent and location of the easement are usually described in the easement instruments (attached to this report), or on a land survey, which you can search for on Protect Your Boundaries (www.protectyourboundaries.ca).

Selling a House with Easements

Easements affect how you can use your land and therefore can affect the value of the property. Always disclose easements to your agent who will advise you on how best to document them in your property's listing.

Buying a house with easements

Before you put a bid in on a property make sure you understand if there are easements that affect it. Easement scan drastically affect your use of land, and so understanding what you can and cannot do on parts of your new house is an important step in your research and decision-making.

About easements and this document:

What Documents Are in this Report?

We have provided you with two types of document:
The Parcel Register for your property.
Easement Instruments on title

Where does the information in this report come from?

The Parcel Register and Easement Instruments come from Teranet Inc. Teranet is the exclusive provider of Ontario's online property search and registration. They developed, own and operate the Ontario Electronic Land Registration System – one of the most advanced, secure and sophisticated land registration systems in the world. Protect Your Boundaries is a licensed partner of Teranet.

How Accurate is this Report?

This report is based on the easements identified in the thumbnail legal description of a property provided by Teranet Inc. If an easement is in the property's thumbnail legal description, we have made every reasonable effort to identify it and provide you with the legal documentation that describes the easements, along with a simplified explanation. We do not warrant the identification or explanation of any easements (registered or unregistered) that do not appear in the property's thumbnail legal description, or that have been documented in the thumbnail legal description in a nonconventional manner.

Is this report a full title search?

No it is not. It is simply an identification of, and explanation of the easements identified in a property's thumbnail legal description.

What is an easement?

An easement provides the legal right to use a portion of another's land for specific purposes. Are there different types of easement? Yes, there are dozens of types of easement, however the two most common ones in residential properties are access easements (including shared driveways, laneways and access paths), and utility easements.

Are all easements shown on title?

The answer should be yes, however the sheer volume of easement that exist means that occasionally a legitimate easement does not make it onto a property's title. That does not mean it doesn't exist or that it's not valid. Unregistered easements are a rare occurrence, so if you suspect that there's an easement on a property that's not shown in the legal description contact us at Protect Your Boundaries for a full investigation.

What is a Parcel Register?

A Parcel Register is the official record of land ownership and property information that is held by the Land Registration System of Ontario. It is a realtime current account of the property you own that is managed by Teranet Inc. who is responsible for managing and providing access to this information.

What is an Easement Instrument?

An easement instrument is a legal document that is registered on title and describes the location, extent and use of an easement, and the rights and obligations of those party to the easement.

Subject To vs. Together With Easement Rights

There are always two parties to an easement:
The Servient Tenement the—party giving up the access right.
The Dominant Tenement—the party gaining the right.

If a property is the servient tenement in an easement, it is "Subject To" the rights of another party. In the property's legal description this is usually abbreviated to "ST" or "S/T". If a property is the dominant tenement in an easement, it holds rights over another property "Together With" that property. In the property's legal description this is usually abbreviated to "TW"or "T/W".

What does it mean if my property is Subject To (S/T) and easement.

It means that another property or party has legal rights to use a portion of your land for a specific purpose. The extent and location of the easement are usually described in the easement instruments (attached to this report), or on a land survey, which you can search for on Protect Your Boundaries (www.protectyourboundaries.ca).

What Does it mean if my property has Together With (T/W) rights on an easement.

It means that your property has legal rights to use a portion of another property for a specific purpose. The extent and location of the easement are usually described in the easement instruments (attached to this report), or on a land survey, which you can search for on Protect Your Boundaries (www.protectyourboundaries.ca).

Selling a House with Easements

Easements affect how you can use your land and therefore can affect the value of the property. Always disclose easements to your agent who will advise you on how best to document them in your property's listing.

Buying a house with easements

Before you put a bid in on a property make sure you understand if there are easements that affect it. Easement scan drastically affect your use of land, and so understanding what you can and cannot do on parts of your new house is an important step in your research and decision-making.

About easements and this document:

What Documents Are in this Report?

We have provided you with two types of document:
The Parcel Register for your property.
Easement Instruments on title

Where does the information in this report come from?

The Parcel Register and Easement Instruments come from Teranet Inc. Teranet is the exclusive provider of Ontario's online property search and registration. They developed, own and operate the Ontario Electronic Land Registration System – one of the most advanced, secure and sophisticated land registration systems in the world. Protect Your Boundaries is a licensed partner of Teranet.

How Accurate is this Report?

This report is based on the easements identified in the thumbnail legal description of a property provided by Teranet Inc. If an easement is in the property's thumbnail legal description, we have made every reasonable effort to identify it and provide you with the legal documentation that describes the easements, along with a simplified explanation. We do not warrant the identification or explanation of any easements (registered or unregistered) that do not appear in the property's thumbnail legal description, or that have been documented in the thumbnail legal description in a nonconventional manner.

Is this report a full title search?

No it is not. It is simply an identification of, and explanation of the easements identified in a property's thumbnail legal description.

What is an easement?

An easement provides the legal right to use a portion of another's land for specific purposes. Are there different types of easement? Yes, there are dozens of types of easement, however the two most common ones in residential properties are access easements (including shared driveways, laneways and access paths), and utility easements.

Are all easements shown on title?

The answer should be yes, however the sheer volume of easement that exist means that occasionally a legitimate easement does not make it onto a property's title. That does not mean it doesn't exist or that it's not valid. Unregistered easements are a rare occurrence, so if you suspect that there's an easement on a property that's not shown in the legal description contact us at Protect Your Boundaries for a full investigation.

What is a Parcel Register?

A Parcel Register is the official record of land ownership and property information that is held by the Land Registration System of Ontario. It is a realtime current account of the property you own that is managed by Teranet Inc. who is responsible for managing and providing access to this information.

What is an Easement Instrument?

An easement instrument is a legal document that is registered on title and describes the location, extent and use of an easement, and the rights and obligations of those party to the easement.

Subject To vs. Together With Easement Rights

There are always two parties to an easement:
The Servient Tenement the—party giving up the access right.
The Dominant Tenement—the party gaining the right.

If a property is the servient tenement in an easement, it is "Subject To" the rights of another party. In the property's legal description this is usually abbreviated to "ST" or "S/T". If a property is the dominant tenement in an easement, it holds rights over another property "Together With" that property. In the property's legal description this is usually abbreviated to "TW"or "T/W".

What does it mean if my property is Subject To (S/T) and easement.

It means that another property or party has legal rights to use a portion of your land for a specific purpose. The extent and location of the easement are usually described in the easement instruments (attached to this report), or on a land survey, which you can search for on Protect Your Boundaries (www.protectyourboundaries.ca).

What Does it mean if my property has Together With (T/W) rights on an easement.

It means that your property has legal rights to use a portion of another property for a specific purpose. The extent and location of the easement are usually described in the easement instruments (attached to this report), or on a land survey, which you can search for on Protect Your Boundaries (www.protectyourboundaries.ca).

Selling a House with Easements

Easements affect how you can use your land and therefore can affect the value of the property. Always disclose easements to your agent who will advise you on how best to document them in your property's listing.

Buying a house with easements

Before you put a bid in on a property make sure you understand if there are easements that affect it. Easement scan drastically affect your use of land, and so understanding what you can and cannot do on parts of your new house is an important step in your research and decision-making.
